

R. O. T. C. WILL SEND RADIO MESSAGE FREE

Personal Communications to Be Flashed Every Night
Will Demonstrate Efficiency.

STATION HAS LICENSE

Erection of Higher Aerioes
Next Week Will Add to Sending Power of Wireless.

Do you want to greet a friend by wireless? The R. O. T. C. wireless station will send personal messages free every night to any place within range, in order to demonstrate the efficiency of the work.

The station maintains wireless communication daily with St. Louis, Independence, Jefferson City, Little Rock, Ark., Camp Pike, Ark., and many towns in Kansas. In addition, messages have been sent to Goshen, Ind., El Dorado Kan., Kenosha Wis., Dallas, Tex., Hammond, Ind., Chicago, Ill., and Houston, Tex. Cards from stations at these towns say that the messages were loud and distinct when received there.

Messages have been received by the station from California, Ky. West, and other points all over the United States. The radio station is located in the R. O. T. C. Headquarters on South Ninth street. The aerial is supported on wooden masts on the roof of this building and of the Nurses' Home.

An eighty-foot steel mast will be erected just back of the Missouri Store on Ninth street, in the next week. Another mast, forty feet high, will be anchored on the top of the R. O. T. C. Headquarters building. The antenna will be stretched between these two masts. The use of this shorter and higher aerial will make possible an increase in the sending efficiency of the station.

This radio station was established during the winter term last year to make use of radio equipment sent to the University by the United States government. Messages were received all last winter and summer, but because of the lack of sending equipment no messages could be sent until this fall. Soon after school opened, C. C. Rens, a student in the School of Law, installed his own sending apparatus in the station. Rens and Willis Corwin, a sophomore in the School of Engineering, now operate the station. Corwin was in the naval radio service during the war.

The station is licensed by the United States government, and is carried in the radio call books as "R. O. T. C. University of Missouri."

Wireless classes may be started, later in the year, according to Major Lloyd Jones, who has charge of the work.

Voters Use Their Pencils.
One of the peculiarities of the election noted by the canvassers, was in the returns from Clayville. There were 29 votes cast at this precinct. According to the tally sheets, the candidates on the Democratic national and state tickets received 50 votes each, while the Republican candidates received 32 votes each. The candidates for congress and county offices on the Democratic ticket received 53 votes each, but the Republican candidates received only 8 votes each.

Dorothy French Has Operation.
Miss Dorothy French, a Christian College student, was operated on early Friday for appendicitis at the Parker Memorial Hospital. Her condition is favorable.

"Stranger, you
ain't done right
by our little

If you keep her away from the companionship and camaraderie that is to be found at the Palms alone—
If you keep her from meet-

"Bumsky," the Fireman, Reveals Family Skeleton of U. S. Grant

Constance Paul Billon, the fireman at the Y. M. C. A. building known to students as "Bumsky," was only a few houses away from the unpretentious cottage of the Grant family in Galena, Ill. Mrs. Grant, nee Julia Dent, had been a schoolmate of Bumsky's mother. When Grant came back from the Mexican War as a lieutenant, he became engaged to Bumsky's aunt, but later broke the engagement to marry Julia Dent.

Bumsky went to school with the Grant children and the two families were intimate. At the time Grant was barely making a living, working in the harness shop of his brother, Orville S. Grant.

When asked about the Grant family, Bumsky puffed heavily on his cob pipe and allowed that he was not different from any other family. He described Grant as a stout, quiet, insignificant old coddler who pattered around, and whom no one considered much of a success in life.

Mrs. Grant was "lively," he said, and a "regular chatterbox." In reply to a question about Grant's excessive use of liquor, Bumsky hesitated and supposed it was not exactly right to uncover family skeletons, especially when the person concerned was dead. He admitted, however, that he had helped Mr. Grant's son, Fred, carry the father up into the barn one time to sober up after his team had wandered home with the driver unconscious in the wagon.

According to Bumsky, Grant did not enlist at Lincoln's first call for volunteers, as is generally believed, but waited until the second call after the Battle of Bull Run. Grant raised a company of sixty-four men and was elected captain of his volunteers. The citizens of Galena presented Grant with a horse and saddle and a fine brace of revolvers. He was refused his commission in the regular army on account of the poor strength of his company. Grant was disappointed and sought solace in liquor. In a few days he was unable to take charge of his company. Bumsky's uncle, Senator Ellis R. Washburn, sent for Grant's family and told them if they would straighten him up he would endeavor to procure the commission. The non-commissioned captain was nursed back to health by his wife and was able to take command of his company once more. Senator Washburn obtained Grant's commission, having used Grant's record in the Mexican War as a means of persuading the War Department to permit the commission. Soon after Grant was elected lieutenant-colonel of a regiment of volunteers. He later rewarded Mr. Washburn by offering him a position in his cabinet, but the senator chose instead the portfolio of minister to France.

After the conclusion of Grant's second administration he returned to Galena. The citizens bought and magnificently furnished the first house in Galena and presented it to the ex-President with fitting ceremonies. The family resided there all the time they remained in Galena.

Cynthia Starr, Ruth Rumsey, Allene Smith, James Quinn and L. Wolfson were admitted as regular members. The club is preparing to give a social for the initiation of the new members.

The Christian College Athletic Association was organized Friday evening at a mass meeting of students after study hall. The following were elected officers: President, Helen Ballard; secretary, Ann Ligon; treasurer, Margaret O'Connell; yell leaders, Lucille Minges and Pauline Daphide. The following captains were chosen: Senior team, Thelma Pence; junior team, Nadine Wiseman; high school team, Mary Gilbert; special, Margaret O'Connell. Class games will begin at once. As a reward to the team making the most points, tans in the college colors will be given to its members.

PRAISES TIGERS' SPIRIT

Says Sooners Didn't Like Tigers and No Team Will

"There is a difference between being defeated and being licked," said Fred Elden, student president, as he called the mass meeting to order in the University Auditorium Friday night.

"The Sooners did not lick the Tigers, and no team ever will. They fought from whistle to whistle all through the afternoon and gave everything that they had. Forget the score part of the game but not the scrapping spirit of the team. The men gave all they had and went off the field sobbing because they could not give more."

Miss Mary Chorn, a senior, William G. Nardin and W. H. ("Wood") Sapp, alumni, also addressed the meeting. The University Band, the Quadrangle Orchestra and the University Glee Club played.

DIRGE FOR THE TAILORED SUIT

"The More, the Merrier" in Beards, Fur, Tinsel and Slashes on Tunic.

By United Press.

New York, Oct. 22.—Is the traditional American tailored suit passing? This is the question haunting the tailored girl of today, as she sees the lodge-podge effects in suits that are in the market this season. The fact is that this year a new before there seems to be a sharp line of cleavage between sport clothes and street clothes. To be sure there are some sport suits of mannish tweeds, patch or inset pockets, and comfortable skirt width, but street suits are a long cry away from the tailored suit that was at the top of sartorial chicness in yesterday's fashion years.

This year suits seem to flaunt the slogan of "the more, the merrier." The more metallic tinsel, embroidery, beads, fur, braid, buttons and spangles that dabble from them, the more it faut are they. Aside from the confusing array of trimming, even lines are becoming lodge-podge. Thus, suits of tiered, ruffled, or skirted skirts are shown with ruffe or panel coats. The reign of the fluffy ruffly suit is upon us. Even such suits as are cut on long, directoire lines in an attempt to get back to the classic tailored effect carry out this new rage by Medici frills of fluted net, lace or satin at cuff and throat.

Considering that suit skirts are being worn shorter than for many seasons back—twelve inches above being the regulation height—the ensemble of a suit overlaid with embellishments and broken by tiers of capes or skirt bandings, is a "choppy" effect, to say the least.

A typical modish suit is now in the window of a very high-priced ladies' suit shop. The material is wool velvet of a peacock blue shade. The raglan-sleeved coat is cut surplice and is fastened by carved wooden buttons of colors ranging from red to yellow. The entire coat is circumscribed by rows of fluting, made from blue chiffon and stitched onto the suit with yellow silk. Fresh handings finish collar and cuffs. The skirt is tiered and has the fluted trimming upon each tier. We grant that the ensemble is novel, but it is also "gingerbready."

This over-elaboration does not seem quite so out of place upon dress suits, fashioned from velvets, brocades or satins. But upon the whole it is the cloth suits of velvet, daveny, drevet de laine, or peach bloom that exploit trimming the most, and the richer fabrics content themselves with a trifling bit of metallic embroidery or fur bands. Such a dress suit is shown of taupe chiffon velvet. The coat is very widely circular at the bottom and is richly embroidered with a leaf and flower pattern wrought in copper silk and iridescent beads. A velvet sash of taupe overlaps the pet-top skirt and taupe fur bandings outline neck and cuffs.

The box coat with leg o' mutton sleeves is back this season. These coat coats are generally cut surplice front and are either belted with fur or adorned with huge carved buttons. Butterfly or scarf collars are very chic. Tunic suits present the novelty of slashes, front, sides and back, with folds of the gay lining showing through the slashes. These tunics have their ups and downs, as one side generally hangs lower than the other. Such skirts as are straight in line are besprinkled with intricate beaded and braided designs.
